

Meet Ella Moreau

Ella Moreau is a 21-year-old junior majoring in Mortuary Science. She's intelligent, outspoken, and deeply passionate about reforming what she sees as the corrupt and environmentally harmful funeral industry. Ella's social media presence reflects her activism, and she posts frequently about death care ethics, green burials, and industry greed. Her tone can be intense and sarcastic, sometimes crossing into language that others find alarming or disrespectful.

In class, Ella is known for challenging her professor's perspectives and for using provocative examples that blur the line between academic debate and personal criticism. Several faculty and students have expressed concern about her online posts and classroom behavior, describing her as "brilliant but confrontational." Ella insists she's being censored for her opinions and sees herself as exposing uncomfortable truths. She remains academically successful but increasingly isolated, frustrated, and mistrustful of authority.

Outside of academics, Ella spends much of her time online, connecting with activist communities that share her environmental and anti-corporate beliefs. These groups validate her frustrations and reinforce her sense of moral urgency. While Ella presents confidence and conviction publicly, her writing and tone suggest fatigue and disillusionment, revealing someone who feels unseen and dismissed within the system she wants to change.
